

The Window

I was ten years old, looking through the kitchen window. It was summer and the sun shone brightly on the empty lot outside. I could see the neighbor's house across the way; I wondered if they could see me. Mentally detached, I could only stare. My father was raping me.